Spring 2019 Courses

Gender & Culture

Fashioning American Identities

GSC 30537

S. White/AMST

We will consider the role of dress in the construction of colonial identities, and examine the ways that bodies operated as sites for negotiating gender, class and ethnic encounters.

Girlhood Studies

GSC 53656/63656

M. Kearney/FTT

In this course we will consider girlhood as a socially constructed lifestage and category of identity intersected by other identity categories and impacted by a variety of social structures and institutions, including the family, education, labor, and media.

Gender and Archaeology

GSC 43604/63604

M. Chesson/ANTH

Under the broad theoretical, political and historical umbrella of feminism, archaeologists today are negotiating their own paths toward an engendered past from multiple directions; this course will explore the diversity of these approaches toward creating a (pre)history of people.

American Feminist Thought

GSC 30638

E. Remus/HIST

This course traces American feminism from the margins of democratic thought in the eighteenth century to the center of modern political discourse and culture. We will approach feminism as an argument—not a received truth—responsive to contemporary historical developments.
